THE CHURCH IN THE MOONLIT FOREST

(WEITTEN FOR THE DISPATCE.) No account of the yellow belles of Bum sketch of the illustrious Revolutionary patriot, Colonel Edward Buncombe, from the Albemarle, landed at Mackey's creek,

A CAROLINA CHARON. Among Colonel Buncombe's slaves was a man namad Charon, far above the average and after the termination of the war was son of color"-master of his own time to come and go when it suited him, but in many respects no better than a slave. Charon mingled with the lower class of whites, and being naturally industrious and caretaking was regarded very favorably by the "white trash," as the slaves called those who permitted him to visit their houses. This intercourse soon developed in tween him and a comely untutored white girl. Her parents were very poor and degirl. Her parents were very poor and de-graded, and really had no objection to the gradeu, and really had no objection to the union; but the law interposed, and said there should be no marriage be-tween the whites and "free persons of color." When there was suspicion that either party were white it was necessary to prove or truthfully swear that the said party had mixed blood in them.

It seems that the lovers were not to be thwa-ted, for Charon gashed his arm, and while the blood was flowing his sweetheart placed her mouth upon the open wound and drank freely of the purple fluid. She then took the necessary oath and they were mar-ried. They were blessed with a numerous progeny, and from them are directly de-scended "the yellow belies of Buncombe."

BECOMING A LANDED PROPRIETOR. . In those days land was very cheap in arolina—selling in some instances as low as 25 cents per acre. Charon had save $100 in the years since obtaining his freedom, and with it he purchased a tract of 400 acres, unbroken wilderness, situate d some miles from any other inhabitants. It was his family and the accordants dwell to this day. The country in the meantime filled up and land became more valuable, so they are not so isolated now. Indeed they form an interesting community in close proximity to a prosper by the white people, yet in all their history not one has ever been known to marry a fullblooded negro. They mated only with mu-lattoes, quadroons and octoroons, so have perpetuated their individuality in complexion etc. Proud and independent, they claim to be the aristocracy of the negroes; and till this day look with contempt upon those who were freed by the late war, and speak of them as the "new issue." On the other hand, the old slaves regard them lightly.

But the relies of Busecombe are the two are frequently brought together, the attention shown the yellow girls is notica-ble in a very marked degree—often to the entire neglect of the blacks. And that' THEY ARE PRETTY

They are tall and straight, with well-rounded and splendidly developed forms; and to see them tripping by twos and threes along the secluded pathways of their community they appear as active and supple as the wild fawns of the neighboring forests. Their small, yellow feet and ankles show plainly beneath bright print gowns; an immense bandana, Tam O'Shanter fashion, encases their coils of shining, black hair, though sometimes it is allowed to fall down the back in long, thick plaits. Their eyes are fine, nose straight, checks dimpled, and teeth perfect. All use snuff, and love candy and red ribbon. If two men are courting the same belle, the chap that carries her the most snuff, candy amid continual song and laughter. The mocking birds singing in the apple trees and attracts delegations from adjoining counties. Such another collection of mu-lattoes would be hard to find in the entire latioes would be nard to into the entire South. All negroes are imitative and all negroes sing well; but these colored people are exceptional. The preacher sings his sermon and his prayer is a song—but look for melody when the congregation rises and sings "Ham-mer-ing," while the minister is urging sinners to the mourners' beach.

AN ENTRANCING SCENE. Picture a dimly lighted church surwhose every shadow is plainly outlined upon the white sandy soil by a bright moon in a cloudless sky. The very air is still and listless, scarcely creating a murmur among the long green needles overhead, but ready to resound the slightest noise. The hoot of the owl in the distance seems to be at your side, and the snapping of a reed in the low grounds crashes through space like the report of a pistol. Imagine yourself standing in this piney grove about the church, both hands of your watch, which you examine by the light of the moon, nearing the midnight hour, the seclusion of the spot almost painful to contemplate, then be ready for the outburst of a hundred trained voices joinoutburst of a hundred trained voices joining in a hymn, as the mourners are called, and you have this Southern scene before you. But you do not hear the music, nor can pen describe it. The hour, the place, the singers all tend to the composition of weird, wonderful, fascinating medody ringing out upon the midnight air strong and clear as the measured clashings of unnumbered cymbals. By close attention these verses are caught and contained for they are repeated again and retained, for they are repeated again and

Some Interesting Anecdotes of Her Early Childhood Life.

Wonderful Stories About Wild Turkeys and The wild turkey is a bird that has almost disappeared from the face of the earth. But it

This operation was performed several days in succession until 19 nice fat birds formed the habit of resorting to the place for their daily breakfast. He then laid for them, and one morning fired into the flock, killing 18 outright at one shot. The nineteenth escaped with a broken wing. His neighbors feasted on turkeys for a week.

Snaces also abound in that region, and some wing. His neighbors feasted on turkeys for a week.

Snakes also abound in that region, and some curious specimens are met with. The chicken snake is one of them. His habits are very peculiar. His occupation is mainly to rob the nests of innocent barnyard fowls, and swallow eggs for nourishment. It is difficult for even a snake to digest an erg in its natural shape, and this serpent resorts to a novel expedient to assist him to perform this useful operation. After swallowing a number of eggs he climbs into the branches of a tree, or crawls to the top rail of a neighboring fence and falls off in order to break them. Another snake inhabiting that section, it is claimed, will swim across a river to bite anyone it may suspect is on the opposite side. throw all else beneath a temporary shadow.

A general impression prevails that Princess Louise is stiff, dull and uninteresting; this is in a measure true, but by no means

A story of Princess Louise's childhood days which has been roughly attributed to another royal grandchild, will illustrate her love for mischief. While visiting the Queen one day at Balmoral she committed some act for which the Queen intended to punish her. Her custom is not to send a naughty child into the corner, but under the table, and under the table was Princess Louise ordered to go, where she was com-Louise ordered to go, where she was completely concealed by a long cloth.

SOMETHING OF AN INCIDENT. After a few minutes the Queen said, "Louise more she was told to stay until she was quite the reply being "Not quite good yet;" and once more she was told to stay until she was quite good. At the third interrogatory, "Louise, are you quite good." Then, come here, Lulu dear, and I'll forgive you." Upon which, from beneath the table, appeared the child, clothed only in nature's garments. The Queen was untable to resist a fit of uncontrolable laughter, and asking why she had undressed herself was told, "Adam and Eve was naked when they was quite good."

Another instance will demonstrate the same point. She was present at a picuic at an age when she had begun to wear her dresses almost to the ground. Prince Leopold was attired in a Highland kilt, and was experiencing some difficulty in rising from the ground grasefully. Princess Louise looked mischievously at him and said: "Ah, Uncle Leo, you had better begin to wear long dresses, tou. I am glad I have no longer to take so much trouble in getting up."

The Prince of Wales was always fond of a good romp with his children, and he had a fondness for what he called "playing bears," and many absurd positions has he been caught in while thus engraged "on all fours." Count Karolyi, the Austrian Ambassador, was ushered rapidly and unexpectedly once into the library at Mariborough House and there found the Prince on his hands and knees with his three girls on his head and back, and the Princess watching the sport with evident amusement, "You beard of a man flying a kite, of course. Well, you never heard of a kite taking up a man to the clouds, I'll wager, did you? I propose to go up on one of my own kites some day before I die. In China and Japan I saw the finest known development of the science of kite flying and kite making. The points I gained there are going to be of great value to me, because I intend to build a kite that will so comply with the law of aerial balance and force as to easily carry objects weighing several hundred pounds, already I have made several satisfactory models, two of which have taken up 40 or 50 pounds, and have acted very nicely. My improvements cover the tail, the ribs, and other portions of the make up of an ordinary kite, and with favorable winds I am confident that I can show a new order of aerial evolution that will astonish you when you see it. That is all I dare to reveal at present, and it is the first public intimation I have ever given about my plans in this respect."

A MAN OF CHARACTER. The Duke of Fife, the bridegroom-elect, is a man of whose character any one might well be proud. In appearance he is of very much the ame build as the Prince of Wales, although Sights and Sounds That Caused a Maine

Man's Hair to Rise.

Kennebec Journal.]

A Boston young lady visiting in this vicinity

A Boston young lady visiting in this vicinity hair, besides wearing short side whiskers of similar hue. He is a magnificent shot and a first-rate whip. A picture of good nature and in every way "a good fellow." It is strange that this very man whose marriage with a princess is so popular because he is an English noble, should have had a quarrel with Prince Henry of Battenberg, whose marriage with Princess Beatrice was so unpopular because he was a foreigner of practically no account.

Because Prince Henry of Battenberg did not receive while staying at Mar Lodge, one of the most lovely properties of the Earl of Fife, situated near Halmoral, some piece of deference which he expected in deer staiking he challenged Lord Fife. It need hardly be said that the latter refused, though from no feelings of cowardice, to fight a duel, explaining that it was not the custom of his country. Shortly after some most indicrous pictures appeared in Punch, portraying Prince Henry deer stalking. These pictures did more, perhaps, than anything else to make this ambitious specimen of German nobility the laughing stock of Europe.

The Earl, or to call him by his new title, the Duke of Fife, seems to have concentrated in his own person all the virtues of his family; at any rate the other members have not distinguished themselves in that line. His eldest sister, Lady Ann Duff, married the Marquis of Townshend, who apparently thought that his mission in life was to drive all begrars from the face of the earth. He used to walk about, looking intensely generous, until some poor tramp would beg of him. The tramp was promptly handed into custody, and next morning the usual heading would appear in the daily papers "Marquis of Townshend and the Beggars." Somehow, his wife seemed to have wished for more attention than she received. so quickly as to compel her to seek shelter in the receiving tomb. She was pretty thorough-ly scaked before arriving at the entrance, and undoubtedly looked rather forlors; and while standing in the doorway waiting for the pass-age of the shower, unconsciously commenced singing.

NOT ALTOGETHER SMOOTH. Her husband, though, remained engressed in ridding the world of mendicants until one fine day Lady Townshend disappeared. Great ex-citement followed, and various surmises as to day Lady Townshend disappeared. Great excitement followed, and various surmises as to the cause of her absence were freely offered. Rumor finally pointed to the friendship between her and Lord Edward Thynne, a brother of the Marquis of Bath. He was a well-known and elderly roue, whose escapades with married women were frequent and romantic. Ultimately the pair were detected in Paris. Lord Townshead sent a trusted friend to demand the restoration of his wife. The guilty fugitive for a few minutes was terrified at the prospects of a cowhiding, but when he discovered that his Lordship was willing to take his wife back, and that all the friend intended to do was to take her away, he exclaimed rapturously, "My dear fellow, God bless you! I have been waiting for a week to getrid of her?" Since then man, wife and mendicants have lived happily and peaceably.

The next sister, Lady Ida, married Adrian Hope, a man of low birth and a snob, who was well though not pleasantly known in London. She soon came to the conclusion that the match was not a wise one, and soon found some one whom she liked better. Unfortunately she permitted him to occupy her husband's place before procuring a divorce from him. The natural result followed in the shape of a divorce suit, which was duly granted. The co-respondent was Mr. William Wilson, whom she afterward married.

The youngest sister, Lady Agnes, married

Why Divorces Are Necessary. Half the domestic quarrels that come to light in the county courts begin at the dinner table, when the wife's temper is ruffled by the heat of the bakeoven or cook stove. People who use only Marvin's famous bread and crackers never quarrel. If you want to live happy order Marvin's rye bread, Queen's jubilee bread and a pound or two of extra soda crackers from your grocer at once.

A HORSE PLAYING GIRL. Type That Upact the Character Reader's Fine Calculations.

Chicago Herald.?

Chicago Heraid.:

A gentleman who prides himself on his ability to read the human face rode downtown yesterday morning on a Southside cable car, and, as is his wont, began studying the features of his fellow-passengers. Directly opposite him sat a beautiful girl of perhaps 20 years of age. What impressed him most was the delicate refinement of her face; there was an almost spiritually expression in the lines of her cate refinement of her face; there was an almost spirituelle expression in the lines of her small, sensitive mouth, while the modest, drooping eyelids, clear-cut nostrils, firm, rounded chin, and small, shapely hands clearly betokened a blue-blooded, high-minded type of womanhood. Still there was something about her which puzzled him; this was her escort. He was as coarse and repulsive as she was re-fined and attractive; his clothes, his manners fined and attractive; his clothes, his manners and his conversation plainly indicated a member of the sporting fraternity. Presently the student of human nature received a shock which upset all his theorizing; it was when the young lady began speaking to her companion.

"I played Champagne Charlie for a winner again yesterday," she said, "and got left as usual. He just got as place and that's all; that horse makes me tired. I guess I'll jump him for good. Made a nice haul on Corrigan, though; got 1,500 to 100 on him, and he made a daisy run and ianded winner by a full length. I could have kissed the darling."

Much more "horsey" talk in this strain followed in which the spirituelle young woman introduced considerable turf slang, proving herself a genuine sport and thoroughly posted on all the latest news of the stables. It was a paralyzer to the gentleman's preconceived notions of the face as an index of the mind, and he is thinking of remodeling his theories.

EVERYONE ADMITS

That the success of a town is dependent upon the relative size and importance of its industries and likewise upon its location and advantages. Without enterprises of moment to support its population, general business languishes; without public improvements people prefer to live elsewhere.

The presence of both these elements prom ises success and the rapid sale of one hundred and fitty lots, on which buildings are in course of erection, confirms the prophecy. THE WESTINGHOUSE AIR-BRAKE WORKS, located in the town, is the most phenomenally successful manufacturing enerprise in the country, and its army of workmen, with their families, would alone constitute a thriving community.

The various public improvements at Wilmerding are being pushed along as speedily as possible, including the laying of the street mains through which the town will be abundantly supplied with pure water. Substantial plank sidewalks, sewers and natural gas add to the public comfort, Double-sized lots at all prices. For choice locations apply at once to the

But it will be comforting to sportsmen to learn that there are still sections of the country where this gamesome and toothsome fowl abounds in comparatively plentiful numbers. Such is said to be the case in some parts of Mississippi. But if the record recently made by an old hunter down there is kept up, the supply will not last long. The hunter in question enticed a flock of turkeys into a lonely place in the woods by scattering corn on the ground. This island of St. Kilts. In 1768, with wife, child and slaves, he embarked for the Carolina coast, entered Hatteras, sailed on up and purchased large tracts of land in the boundaries of the county of Tyrrel. Near the still waters of Mackey's he erected his famous residence "Buncombe Hall." Over the gate at the entrance to the grounds of the mansion was written this couplet: "Buncombe Hall Welcomes all!" Which was true to the letter. The poor and unfortunate never went away empty, and his friends were always sumptuously enter-tained. At the breaking out of the Revolution be raised a regiment, quartered it at "Buncombe Hall," equipped it at his individual expense, and when ready for service he, at its head, gallantly fought in de-fense of the colonies until wounded at the battle of Brandywine. He was captured by the British in that battle and carried to Philadelphia where he died a prisoner of war in 1779, at the early age 1. 37.

in intellect, appearance and reliability. In fact, a mixture of European, Spanish and African bloods coursed through his veins. He was a great favorite of the Colonel's, and after the termination of the war was set free by the Buncombe family. Still, regarded as a negro with few of the rights and privileges of the white man, he was what they termed in those days a "free perous and wealthy agricultural section.

At this stage in the proceedings the Irishman appears on the scene plodding slowly up the walk in front of the tomb. He stops, hearing the music, and looks around. Presently he espies the figure in the door. It is a rather uncanny sight at that time of day in such a shower, and the spectacle is too much for his nerves. He turns pale, his knees seek each other in fear and trembling, and finally terror overcomes him and with a muttered imprecation he turns and fices. Over fences, ditches, fields and roads he flies in his haste to quit the spot, while the heartless Boston maiden changes from a song to a hearty peal of laughter at the ludicrous sight. But the yellow belles of Buncombe are much more popular than their duskier cousins. At festivals, picnics, etc., where the two are frequently bounds.

A Bay City policeman found a pair of boots on the sidewalk a few nights ago. A little further on he found a pair of socks. Then he found a no admirer of female loveliness will deny coat and a pair of trousers in an alley, and still further on he found the man asleep in a hall-way. He had undressed in sections. Before the meeting closes for the night numbers have gone up to the bench to be prayed for, while some have "come through" and are shouting the Redeemer's praise. The meeting is continued day and night until all are converted, or profess to be.

W. COTTEN DOWNING. THE GROOM IS A MAN OF CHARACTER

[CORRESPONDENCE OF THE DISPATCH.] PHILADELPHIA, August 2 .- An English nobleman, visiting in Philadelphia who has an intimate acquaintance with the Duke of Fife and has enjoyed much pleasant intercourse with the Prince of Wales and his family, tells the following charming stories of the royal bride. He also gives the correct versions of the unfortunate marriages of the Duke of Fife's sisters, of which several erroneous accounts have been re-

Princess Louise, now Duchess of Fife, is not outwardly strikingly beautiful, the Georgian features are too prominent for this to be possible, although her appearance is pleasing and year by year she decidedly improves. It must be borne in mind, too, that when she has been seen in public she was always in company with the Princess of Wales, whose wonderful beauty and charming grace of countenance were enough to

are you good yet?" "No," came the prompt reply. "Then stay where you are." After an-other interval the same question came again, the reply being "Not quite good yet;" and once Baldwin regards the parachute fever as quiescent in this country just at present, but he will nevertheless appear at a number of the State and county fairs in the West during the company with his brother Sam, who has also embraced parachute leaping since Thomas' success. The two were old circus men and trained aeronauts long before Thomas started
